Passage (II)

- 2 Read this short biography about the famous English naturalist, and answer the questions.

Who Was Charles Darwin?

Charles Robert Darwin was one of the most famous scientists of the 19th century. He was born on February 12, 1809 in Shrewsbury, England. He spent five years travelling around the world as ship's naturalist on HMS Beagle. During his journey Darwin made many observations of plants and animals. He used his observations to develop his theory of evolution - the work he is remembered for to this day. It took Darwin nearly twenty years to prepare his theory for publication. After returning from the voyage of the Beagle, Darwin did research from his home at Down House, Kent. It was here that he did a lot of his work, spending hours in his garden doing experiments to test his theories. During his life he wrote many books and scientific papers, including his most famous works 'On the Origin of Species' and 'The Descent of Man.' Darwin was well respected by other great scientists of the day. Because of his important help to natural history, people requested for Darwin to be buried in Westminster Abbey after his death on April 19, 1882. The request was accepted, and you can visit his grave to this day.
