Albert Einstein was a German scientist who has many important theories. His most important one is the Theory of Relativity. The formula he developed describes how energy (E) is related to mass (m). This theory changed the world of science. Albert Einstein was born in Germany in March, 1879, and lived most of his childhood in the city of Munich. He had speech problems as a child, and his parents didn't think he was very intelligent. He didn't talk until he was four years old. He didn't read until he was nine. He said he didn't like school but loved reading and learning on his own. He was married twice. He had two sons and a daughter.

His father had an electronics shop so Albert learned all about science and electronics from him. Because he really loved math, he wanted to study that in school. He finished his education in Switzerland. Later he moved back to Bern, Germany and started his first job as a clerk.

Albert moved to the United States in 1933 and became a United States citizen in 1940. His Theory of Relativity changed how scientists observed the world. In 1905 Einstein understood that light is made up of photons. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1921.

He loved music and said that if he were not a physicist, he would be a musician. He played the violin and piano and said that he enjoyed that. Albert Einstein died in the United States in 1955.
